Course Number and Title: ENGL 2365: Literature and Film

Please attach syllabus as a separate document. (If this is a new or substantially changed course, it will require University Curriculum Committee approval.)

List the student learning outcomes for the course (i.e., statements of what students will know and/or be able to do as a result of taking this course and include the Core-Curriculum Learning Objectives (CLOs) addressed. See example below.

Student Learning Outcomes (SLOs): Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

1. identify major and minor works in various decades by title and author/or director;
2. analyze the cultural, social, and historical aspects of literature and film.
3. perform close readings of the various texts and films;
4. make connections between literary periods, writers, writings, directors, films and themes; and
5. compose texts that effectively address purpose, style, and content. (This includes: clear focus, structurally unified development of ideas, appropriate rhetorical style and visual style, correct use of Standard American Academic English (SAAE), and appropriate and ethical use of primary and secondary sources.)

Core-Curriculum Objectives (CCOs):

1. Critical Thinking Skills: includes creative thinking, innovation, inquiry, and analysis, evaluation and synthesis of information. (SLOs # 1, 2, 3, 4, 5)
2. Communication Skills: includes effective development, interpretation and expression of ideas through written, oral and visual communication. (SLOs # 2, 3, 5)
3. Personal Responsibility: includes the ability to connect choices, actions and consequences to ethical decision-making. (SLOs # 2, 4, 5)
4. Social Responsibility: includes intercultural competence, knowledge of civic responsibility, and the ability to engage effectively in regional, national, and global communities. (SLOs # 1, 2, 4, 5)

___ Empirical & Quantitative Skills

Because we will be assessing student learning outcomes across multiple core courses, assignments in your course must include evaluation of the relevant core competencies. For each competency checked above, indicate the specific course assignment(s) which, when completed by students, will provide evidence of the competency. Provide detailed information, such as copies of the paper or project assignment, copies of individual test items, etc. A single assignment may be used to provide data for multiple competencies.

Critical Thinking:

ENGL 2365 has a number of opportunities for students to demonstrate their critical thinking skills. Students will be assigned three (3) essays that will ask them to analyze literary texts and/or films from cultural, social, and historical perspectives, and these assignments. Student artifacts, especially the final essay assigned in the course, can be assessed using a rubric designed for WIN courses in English. The rubric domains of focus, organization/development, and research include the critical thinking aspects of “creative thinking, innovation, inquiry, and analysis, evaluation, and synthesis of information.” For assessment purposes, instructors will submit these rubric scores for core-curriculum assessment, or student essays can be assessed by a Core-Curriculum Assessment Committee using a rubric designed specifically for “critical thinking.”

Communication Skills:

The same assignment submitted for “Critical Thinking” can be submitted for assessment of “Communication Skills” in the area of written and visual communication. The last assigned essays will include students’ ability to analyze a feature length motion picture film from a given time period or an analysis of a performance in relation to the original text. For example, students might analyze scenes from the motion picture Apocalypse Now and compare it to the original text (Heart of Darkness). Giving students the opportunity to examine how visual representations are often an altered version of the original allows them to make informed interpretations of their own, which should be grounded in the primary texts. Additionally, because students will be asked to analyze literary and motion picture periods from cultural, social, and historical perspectives, this creates the opportunity for students to look at how visual artifacts can complement the study of written, literary works.

Student essays can be assessed using a rubric designed for WIN courses in English. The rubric domains of focus, organization/development, and research include the communication aspects for written and visual communication skills. For assessment purposes, instructors will submit these rubric scores for core-curriculum assessment, or student essays can be assessed by a Core-Curriculum Assessment Committee using a rubric designed specifically for “communication skills.”

For oral communication, ENGL 2365 students will be asked to work in groups and communicate their ideas about literature and film/ and or a service-learning project, perhaps answering specific questions posed by the instructor or perhaps developing their own set of questions, within a small-group setting. To assess their oral communication skills, students assess their peers using a peer-to-peer assessment. The results of this assessment could then be submitted for evaluation by the Core-Curriculum Assessment Committee.

Empirical & Quantitative Skills: N/A

Teamwork: N/A

Personal Responsibility:

The nature of literary study inevitable allows for the discovery of “how ideas, values, beliefs, and other aspects of culture express and affect human experience” and invites “aesthetic and intellectual creation in order to understand the human condition across cultures” (Core Curriculum 2014 Quick Reference Guide 1). As instructors lead students through a systematic study of literature and film within and across periods, students will have the opportunity to see how ideas and beliefs shape, and are shaped by, the cultural, historical, and social milieu at the time the texts and films were generated. Essay topics could be catered to address one or more of these contextual factors, or mid-term and final exam questions could explicitly ask students to address how the texts and films they studied “express or affect human experience.” To assess “personal responsibility,” the final essay assigned, or mid-term/final exam responses, could be submitted to the Core-Curriculum Assessment Committee.

Social Responsibility:

Literary study also lends itself well to the study of “social responsibility” and the “intercultural competence, knowledge of civic responsibility, and the ability to engage effectively in regional, national, and global communities.” Students who successfully complete ENGL 2365 will understand how literature and film reflect the struggles of people across cultures. For example, an exam question, or, alternatively, an essay prompt, could be “How does the main character’s struggle with illiteracy in the novel Push and the film Precious reflect illiteracy in our present day local community?” Exam/Essay questions and responses that deal with these very issues could be submitted for assessment to the Core Curriculum Assessment Committee. The service-learning component for this course (a group video) is also tied to the required reading Push and the film translation Precious. Interviews of participants at Literacy Volunteers of Laredo are conducted and video recorded by students as part of a group project. Student groups produce a short promotional video for the organization and present it in class. Videos are uploaded on a YouTube channel specifically designed for this service-learning project. The organization can use any video at any time for promotional or fundraising purposes. Individual one-page reflections on the service-learning experience can be turned in as part of the grade for this assignment. Reflection pieces can focus on the student’s “social responsibility”, “intercultural competence” and “civic responsibility”, and can be assessed using a rubric designed for “social responsibility”.

Will the syllabus vary across multiple sections of the course? Yes No

List the assignments that will be constant across the sections:

The assignments that will be constant across the sections will be three (3) assigned essays, a mid-term, and final-exam. The content may vary from section to section because of the individual instructor’s predilection for one text or film over another. This is deemed acceptable in the study of literature because the SLOs remain. Moreover, these kinds of variations create flexibility in the curriculum to keep the course fresh from semester to semester as well as reducing the chances of academic dishonesty inherent in maintaining the same content semester after semester, especially with regard to examination questions.
