HIST 3333 Central America and the Caribbean Three semester hours

The Caribbean Basin’s impact on early modern and modern globalization. Course takes a cultural as well as economic approach to topics such as slavery, European imperial rivalries, plantation economies, piracy, monoculture, and U.S. interventionism. Includes comparative perspective of the Hispanic, English, and French Atlantic Worlds.

Learning Outcomes:

Students will:

- Demonstrate advanced knowledge of the people and events that shaped Central American and Caribbean societies from 1492 to the present
- Analyze historical documents relating to evolving political and cultural approaches to Central American and Caribbean history
- Explain their own perspectives about history through writing assignments and classroom discussion

Justification: These changes reflect the ongoing efforts on the part of the History faculty to address the needs of our students and reflect a more updated, flexible, and realistic definition of courses to align with the best practices of our discipline nationally. The change of course number allows for the creation of a logical sequencing of upper division courses. Furthermore, it reflects the areas of specialization and research interests of new faculty.
