Abstract

Due to the ongoing growth of the Hispanic population in Texas, educators have an obligation to prepare Hispanic students for college coursework in order to produce a viable workforce in Texas. The researcher will survey high school seniors and college freshmen regarding their perceptions of their preparation for college coursework. The researcher hypothesizes that many Hispanic high school students enter colleges and universities inadequately prepared for college work.