

Graduate Admissions Changes

TAMIU Office of Graduate Studies

New Rules

What is provisional admission?

Provisional admission means that you have not submitted all documents or test scores for admission, but are allowed to attend for one semester (i.e., enroll in up to 6 graduate hours at Texas A&M International University with a 3.0 or better overall graduate grade point average) while you submit these documents. Provisional admission is not available for all degree programs, and is not available to international students. You should check with the chair of the department responsible for delivering your degree program to determine if provisional admission is available in your program.

What is probationary admission?

Probationary admission to a degree program means that you have submitted all documents for admission but do not meet all requirements for full admission. This could be a low overall grade point average, low GRE or GMAT scores, not meeting departmental requirements, or lack of background for the chosen master's program. If granted probationary admissions, you will change from probationary to full admission upon completing 12 graduate hours at Texas A&M International University with a 3.0 or better overall graduate grade point average and fulfilling any other conditions the admissions committee may prescribe.
