Saldivar receives scholarship for Rutgers' Ph.D. Program

A new academic experience awaits Karina Moreno Saldivar '05, '08 this fall. She will be attending the Ph.D. Program for Public Administration at Rutgers University in Newark, NJ. Saldivar was notably selected along with seven other students to be a part of a very prestigious program and will be the first Hispanic female to attend the program. "I still can't believe it because Rutgers' Ph.D. program is very selective and has a very high success rate," explained Saldivar.

Even though she had not anticipated being one of the few chosen to attend the program, Dr. Peter Haruna, Associate Professor of Public Administration and Associate Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at TAMU, insisted that Saldivar submit her application. Dr. Haruna guided Saldivar throughout most of her academic career. "He helped me through the whole process," stated Saldivar.

A couple of weeks later, the good news was accompanied with the fact that she would be receiving a full scholarship, as well as money for her living expenses. "When I received the news, I was in such shock, I felt my eyes swell up with tears," stated Saldivar.

Her parents and also her husband, Christopher Saldivar '09 are very excited and supportive of her achievement.

Education plays a very important part in Saldivar's life and wants to pay it forward. Her aspirations include a professorship at a university. "I love academics; I love being in a classroom," exclaimed Saldivar.

As part of her degree, which is predominantly in research, Saldivar is looking forward to publishing her own work focusing on student academic success. She is interested in "bridging the performance gap for minority students."

As a minority student herself, Saldivar understands the struggles some students face and would like to give back to her community. "It really helps to have a mentor, if I didn't have Dr. Haruna, I wouldn't have done this. You can go as far as you want to go," explained Saldivar.

Dickerson receives Cliff Dochterman Award

J Michael Dickerson '98 recently received the Cliff Dochterman Award for his contribution and service to the Boy Scouts. The Cliff Dochterman Award is presented in honor of Cliff Dochterman, the President of Rotary International, to recognize an individual Rotarian or Rotaractor. The recipient must be a role model and provide service and leadership to Scouts.

He received his MBA in International Trade at TAMU. Dickerson, is not only an attorney and an inspiration to his scout members, he also tries to provide the same service to other members of his community by advising them on how to achieve financial stability and maintaining it through his book and his column in the lifestyle magazine "LaredoSol."

TAMU Coach Selected for Top Honors

With the team's and players' success, one individual's performance could not go unnoticed: head coach Daryl Vincent earned the top award, Coach of the Year.

He has led the TAMU Women's Basketball to a 32-45 (22-20 Heartland Conference), and this year, the team played its first season as an active NCAA Division II member. Under Vincent's leadership, six players earned All-Heartland Conference honors and six have earned Academic All-Conference honors. Vincent was named the 2009 Heartland Conference Coach of the Year.

Vincent coached for 11 years as an assistant, before heading up the Dustdevils in 2006. He was the assistant coach at Texas A&M Kingsville for five years. While there, he served as assistant for the women's team for two seasons and assistant for the men's program for three years. The women's team improved their records while Vincent coached, and the men advanced to the NCAA South-Central Region for the first time in eight years during his second season as coach.

Four players Vincent recruited during his tenure at TAMU-Kingsville have gone on to play professional basketball. His recruits also included three All-Americans, two Lone Star Conference (LSC) Players of the Year, LSC Newcomer of the Year, LSC Freshman of the Year and many other all-conference honorees.
